

Contract & Warranty Renewals

Don't Leave Revenue on the Table

INTRODUCTION

The lifeline of any business is their customers. Forging new business relationships and converting net new business is every sales person's aim. However, you should not lose sight of existing clients, who have already put trust into your business and transacted. Happy customers want to stay loyal and will only wander if they feel unloved, unappreciated or they get a better offer.

How do you find the balance of what's more important? Do you want your sales floor to be focusing on penetrating new markets, or do you want your sales floor to be chasing renewals with existing customers? In the ideal world the answer would be both.

In the real world, contract and warranty renewals are often left on the 'to do list' or are overlooked due to the amount of effort versus reward.
